

Robert Phillips is President and CEO of Alluma, a nonprofit social enterprise that working to make access to help and support for the 100 million economically insecure people simple and easy by reimagining the way technology is used to advance race and economic equity.

Robert has nearly 25 years of experience working in the health, nonprofit, community technology and philanthropic sectors. Prior to joining Alluma as President and CEO, Robert worked at Kaiser Permanente. For 10 years, Robert worked in philanthropy at both The California Endowment and Sierra Health Foundation. Other previous roles include his work at PolicyLink, the Service Employees International Union, and the AFL-CIO. Robert has also been involved in a number of efforts to use technology solutions at the community level to provide community access to basic technology, accelerate access to public benefits, and increase voter registration.

Robert received a bachelor's degree in political science and economics from Morehouse College in Atlanta, a master's in public administration from the Maxwell School at Syracuse University, a master's in public health from Harvard University, and is ABD from the Gillings School of Global Public Health at UNC-Chapel Hill.